TSO Trains Amateur Radio Operators to Support Disaster Preparedness

May 2007, Transportation Security Administration

Pensacola TSO Jeff Smith trained 30 TSA volunteers to use emergency high frequency radio equipment during disasters. The 30 also qualified for amateur radio technician class operator licenses.

Employees participating in the May 9 training traveled from Florida, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Arizona and New York State.

"Pensacola is fortunate that we have a TSO who is a highly experienced amateur radio operator, trainer and examiner," said FSD Steve Earnest. "His volunteer efforts have given the agency tremendous in-house capability that would have been expensive for the agency to replicate using contractors."

The Federal Communications Commission requires licensing for HF - or ham - operators, who can be invaluable when telephone and cell phones are inoperable.

Box? What Box?

July 2007, ARRL Contact!, Vol 5, No 7

"In times of change learners inherit the earth while the learned find themselves beautifully equipped to work in a world that no longer exists." - Eric Hoffer

In a market-driven, corporate society such as ours, Amateur Radio is an anachronism. Sure, we use modern communications tools, but the whole concept of ham radio is out of step with the majority of the culture. We don't just think out of the box – we don't even have a box.

Let me explain.

Our world is set up so that marketable ideas are generated by companies who then immediately patent them as their own. They take the idea and put it into a box. They sell you that box with a set of instructions on how you are to use it. Any alteration or other use at least voids the warranty and might even get you into patent infringement hassles.

Consider the new Apple PDA-phone thingy or the coming new Windows OS. Watch the way it is marketed and sold this month. They pitch it to you, tell you what you can do, and make sure it is sealed up well. You plunk down your money and walk out with the new item - registered, patented, closed and boxed. It's as if it is still more theirs than yours. Then they can give you "updates."

This is good corporate strategy. It keeps corporate profits up, maintains a market, and kills creativity.

But Amateur Radio is, by its very nature, quite different.

You don't just buy a license, you learn it. Yes, you can buy a radio in a box – but then what? There are many other parts and pieces to each system, many variations, many philosophies on how to create a station. It's "open software" and unbridled tinkering – the very antithesis of corporate thinking! There is no box. Instead there is the merry chaos of multiple modes, types of radios, antennas, bands, operating styles and goals, and the incessant itch to change something inside just to see what we can make it do. Corporate systems try to maintain product lines. Truly imaginative creations come out of basements and attics.

Recognize Your Volunteers with a President's Volunteer Service Award

June 2007, ARRL Contact!, Vol 5, No 6

Your most valued amateur Radio Operators can now be recognized with President's Volunteer Service Award Pin, Certificate of Achievement, and a letter of congratulations from the President of the United States and President's Council on Service and Civic Participation.

Three categories, bronze, silver, and gold represent different levels of participation, over the course of a year. For example, an adult giving 100 hours of volunteer time over 1 year qualifies for a bronze award, then could receive a silver pin at the 250 hour mark. Gold pins are awarded for 4000 hours of participation over a lifetime.

You may remember that in early April Randy Hatfield, AG6RH, received such an award in person from the President. <http://www.arrl.org/news/stories/2007/04/13/104/> While no one can guarantee another Presidential visit, being recognized by this award is a major boost to volunteers!

All President's Volunteer Service Awards must be verified and issued through institutions which are called Certifying Organizations (CO).

There are some minimal postage and handling costs involved with the award. The lead time for awards is 6-8 weeks.

Full information is at <http://www.presidentialserviceawards.org>
